

Milestone 2 Project Tools & Agile Methodology Summary

Project Tool: Trello

Project Plan: The team is split into two roles, front-end development and back-end development. The idea here is those more experience with backend development can work independently of those who focus on front-end development, allowing each half of the team to only learn the languages pertaining to a certain type of user story. While the team is divided into two groups, it is not a complete segregation, both teams will communicate with each other to ensure the front-end plays well with the back-end.

Agile Meetings: First meeting discussed of what kind of product the team would produce, second meeting finalized the product idea and decided which languages and APIs would be used as well as what aspect of the product each member would focus developing, third meeting discussed how the back-end team would start their work and how the front-end would start their work.
